When I met LL Cool J I had just quit Fatburger

When I met LL Cool J I had just quit Fatburger it was a Saturday morning & not knowing how I would afford to pay for it I drove my new-used powder blue Oldsmobile Cutlass Supreme with my sister to the Sam Goody's off Washington Blvd in South Central adjacent & we met our friend/ex-coworker Squeak who was 17 with glasses & 6 feet tall & nicknamed by the same ex-coworker who nicknamed me Twin 1 & my younger sister Twin 2 because she couldn't pronounce our names but our boss Lena could she called our names all damn day she had a slight goatee & a limp & crooked bifocals on a brass chain she was mean & because she said we thought we were cute she loved making us do the dirtiest work like clean the toilets & underneath the grill especially when the district manager changed our titles to guest service rep & we were supposed to engage the customers not deal with food or cleaning so much & one day she spilled something on the floor & told me to mop it up right now this was after she accused me of stealing $20 from the register so I was already mad & Mike the grill guy said she found it under the register the next morning so I looked her right in the sweaty face & said you mop it up & dropped the mop like a microphone & walked out to applause anyway we stood together in line to buy LL's new CD & talking shit about Lena's missing side teeth I had on black slacks & black Aerosole sandals & a cheap silky-polyester Rampage button-down with cap sleeves & graphic blue sunflowers & carried my lipstick & wallet in a tiny pleather backpack I'm sure I looked a hot poor mess but oh well we got to see LL lick them lips & smile & sign our posters & CDs I sent the poster to my niece in Michigan & the CD wasn't all that good but I did like that one song with Boyz II Men we bumped that in the Oldsmo & I still miss that car's hellified bass
