

Lisa Gluskin Stonestreet

Charge

Nine-volt coppertop. Stolen from the box under the counter at my father's store, dug in like a secret (like the cigarette the summer before) under the oleander in the backyard.

Put it to my tongue, polar distance collapsed to half, half again: sharp star in its leap past physics, alkaline arc of toward.

